To truly reap the benefits of a French language education, it is important to consider and to take advantage of the opportunities to continue to learn and to use French both in the classroom and beyond. Claudette Tardif, during her address titled “But Can They Laugh in French...” (Winnipeg, November 3, 2006) states:

For young Anglophones, choosing to learn French is more than learning another way to speak. It is also a means of learning about a culture, a world of life that is different from their own. It is therefore very important that language learning be connected to the culture of the language being learned. Otherwise, learning the other language is devoid of meaning. John Ralston Saul supported this view, stating the “Language is a bag filled with culture. Without culture, the bag is empty.” A second language means a second culture.

I cannot emphasize enough the importance of real life communication activities, cultural activities (exchanges, theatre, music, media and technology) as part of the curriculum for language learning. In my opinion, the best way to help young people is to give them opportunities to experience the culture and practice outside class. They can learn to love French by reading French books, going to French plays, hearing French music, exploring the Internet in French, and participating in extra-curricular activities in French. We need to find ways and means of better allowing students to engage in French culture.

It is important that students take responsibility for their language learning. Research has shown that confidence plays an important role in motivation to use a language. In order to develop the assurance and competency necessary to be fluently bilingual, it is extremely important that students have the continuous opportunity to authentically use their French language skills. The best way to do this is through genuine experiences, relationships with French speakers, integration into the French community through social activities and linguistic and cultural exchanges.
